Itinerary

Horse race and archery are generally popular in Tibet, and Gyantse enjoys prestige of being the earliest in history by starting in 1408. Contests in early times included horse race, archery, and shooting on gallop followed by a few days' entertainment or picnicking. Legend says Gyantse Prince of Dhamag Parba Sangpo in the Sakya regime enjoyed great prestige among the people, and after his death his children held a memorial ceremony on the time of that year, they held a series of religious activities, like unfolding the painted scroll of Buddha and sorcerer's dance and entertainments such as horse races, wrestling matches and weightlifting. In 1447, Tashi Rabten became Gyantse Prince of Dhamag, and he added horsemanship and archery, Tibetan Opera and songs and dances to the ceremony. Thus, the present Gyantse Dhamag Festival came into being. It celebrates for seven days with different activities, culture show, horse racing competitions between the villages under Gyantse county. Presently ball games, track and field events, folk songs and dances, barter trade are in addition to the above.
